

Is your operation ready for AI? Ten honest questions.

Five minutes, no jargon. Answer yes or no. This isn't a quiz about technology — it's about where money quietly leaks out of a service business. Count your "yes" answers and read what they mean below.

01 Do messages from new clients (website, Instagram, text) sometimes sit unanswered for more than an hour during business hours? ☐ YES ☐ NO

02 After 7 PM or on Sundays, do new inquiries wait until the next business day for an answer? ☐ YES ☐ NO

03 Do you get no-shows every week — even when someone "confirmed"? ☐ YES ☐ NO

04 Do clients ever write in Spanish and get answered in English, late, or not at all? ☐ YES ☐ NO

05 Does your front desk retype the same client info into more than one system (calendar, CRM, notes)? ☐ YES ☐ NO

06 Could an online review sit unanswered for a week without anyone noticing? ☐ YES ☐ NO

07 If your best front-desk person quit tomorrow, would client conversation history walk out with them? ☐ YES ☐ NO

08 Do pricing questions wait until "the owner is free" before anyone answers? ☐ YES ☐ NO

09 If a client claimed you promised them a discount, would you have no record to check? ☐ YES ☐ NO

10 Has your team ever sent a wrong price or double-booked — and you found out from the client? ☐ YES ☐ NO

What your score means

0–2 yes Your operation is tighter than most. AI would optimize, not rescue — and honestly, you can wait. Revisit in six months.

3–5 yes You're leaking revenue in a few specific places. The fix usually isn't "more software" — it's closing your top two gaps first. A one-week diagnostic tells you which ones they are and what each is costing you.

6+ yes You don't have a technology problem — you have an unattended-conversations problem, and it compounds weekly. One governed agent covering messages, booking, and follow-up would pay for itself fast. But diagnose before you buy: make whoever you hire show you the gaps first.
